Calling all prospective medical students who think they might be interested in Cambridge University! Gonville & Caius College is the largest medical college, with more than 20 medical students admitted per year. Not only does this create a warm community feel, but it also gives the benefit of a great deal of study resources passed down from (students in) senior years and some of the best supervisors in the university.

On 31st January, we will be hosting our annual open day to give those with little or no experience of university a taste of student life at Cambridge. The day will involve supervision-style sessions, lectures about the course and applying to it, and the chance to ask current students any questions you may have. Even if you’re not sure that the course is for you, the day will provide the information necessary to decide.

To register your interest, simply fill in the survey by Thursday 10th January. No previous medical work experience or knowledge about studying at Cambridge is required.
